Reagan Plans Talk On Soviet Ties as Signal to Kremlin

By Michael Getler and Don Oberdorfer

Washington Part Service WASHINGTON - President Ronald Reagan is expected to make a unior speech soon on U.S. Soviet relations that administration officials say is meant to send a positive signal to the Kremlin.

The presidential speech is expected to come before Jan. 18, the Russians the "focus of evil" as when Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko are scheduled to

U.S. officials said the speech is meant to set a positive tone for that meeting, which is the first such en-counter the September, when the Soviet downing of a Korean jetliner produced a clash in public and pri-

Since then, the Russians also have suspended all three sets of arms county negotiations that were in progress; and relations have re-manned strained. Administration officials, in in-

Foreign Minister Makes Offer to Hold Direct Talks With SWAPO Guerrillas

JOHANNESBURG — South last week, the president of the Africa announced Sunday that its South-West Africa People's Orgatroops have begun withdrawing from southern Angola. It also tentatively offered direct negotiations with the Namibian guerrilias it has been fighting during a monthlong

Foreign Minister R.F. Botha said Saturday night that he would be prepared to permit direct talks between a delegation headed by the administrator-general of South-West Africa, or Namibia, and the South-West Africa People's Orga-

Senior military officials said Saturday that South African forces had killed 324 Namibian guerrillas, Cuban and Angolan soldiers in a three-day hattle 200 kilometers (125 miles) north of the Namibian

[South Africa said it lost 21 men, The Associated Press reported.] The officials said the operations in Angola were being scaled down after achieving their aim of blunt-ing an attempt by about 1,000 guerrillas to infiltrate Namibia. This season of the year is the time when insurgents have usually sought to penetrate South-West Africa because the rains produce luxuriant foliage and thus cover for guerrilla infantry, while muddy tracks slow their mechanized adversaries.

A South African offer last mouth of a 30-day truce beginning Jan. 31 has been positively received by the guerrilla organization and Angola. but both sides have set potentially unacceptable conditions for a

In a letter to the United Nations nization, Sam Nujoma, asked Secretary-General Javier Pérez de Cuellar to arrange a truce through direct talks with South Africa.

Mr. Botha's said South Africa would be represented at talks through its appointed administra-tor general, Willie van Niekerk. Observers said this might not be acceptable to the guerrillas, who may demand to talk directly to senior South African cabinet minis ters and officials.

They called the offer an important psychological breakthrough for South Africa after declarations in the past that it would never talk directly to the guerrilla organization, known as SWAPO.

"It recognizes SWAPO's staying power as a political and fighting force and the indications that their political influence in Namibia is growing, said André du Pisani, a senior political science lecturer at the University of South Africa.

Observers said guerrilla strength was reflected in the fact that despite high casualties in combat with better-equipped South African forces, they never appeared to be short of fighters and its leadership structure remained intact.

SWAPO has fought a sporadic bush war for 17 years with South African troops along the territory's oorthern border with Angola, South Africa refuses to consider statehood for Namibia unless 20,000 to 30,000 Cubans leave Anla. The demand, backed by the United States, has been a major obstacle to progress toward inde-pendence for the territory.

Underlying South Africa's con-cern over Namibia is a fear that independence could bring guerrilla war to the borders of South Africa.

Soviet Hints at Rebuke of Pilot in KAL Attack

By John F. Burns

MOSCOW - A Soviet Air Force magazine has published an article implicitly criti-cal of the pilot who shot down a South Korean airliner four months ago.

The January issue of Aviatsiya i Kosmonavilta, which came our Saturday, also appeared to express disapproval of the conduct of officers on the ground who supervised the interception and destruction of the airliner.

Two hundred and sixty-nine persons were killed in the incident Sept. L.

The monthly said the key person in any air combat is the pilot and it is up to him in certain circumstances "to make the final decision," particularly when it involves identifying intruding planes and their country of origin.
The article criticized ground commanders who "hide behind others" and avoid judgments in difficult situations.

Although the article alluded to the downing of the South Korean airliner, it did not link its conclusions directly to the incident. But readers were likely to make the connection. Soviet statements have acknowledged not establish its identity.

The article was signed by Colonel General Screei V. Golubev, an air force deputy com-mander in chief for combat training, whose responsibilities include the rules of engagement followed by the pilot who fired two heat-seeking missiles at the airliner over Sakhalin Island in the Soviet Far East.

The article, the main feature in the magazine, was illustrated with photographs of pilots flying Sukhoi-15 fighters, the kind used in the attack on the South Korean plane. The journal is distributed to flight crew rooms around the country, and there seemed no doubt that it would be read as a lecture on the lessons to be drawn from the downing of the Soviet military commanders defended the decision to attack the airliner. But there have been reports that officers in the Far East command of the Air Defense Forces have been reassigned and demoted.

that the pilot who destroyed the airliner did General Golubev laid the groundwork for his criticisms carefully. At one point in the article, he landed pilots who took "extreme actions" against planes that entered Soviet airspace and refused to land, as the South Korean jet did. He said behavior in such circumstances should be modeled after a Captain Yeliseyev, who "some years ago rainmed an intruding plane rather than let it escape, killing himself in the process.

> Western military attaches who read the article attached less significance to such passages than to those stressing the need for pilots and commanders to think for them-

A further signal of the general's intentions came in the opening passage of the article, when he discussed the need for vigilance against civilian airliners that deliberately violate Soviet airspace as a test of the air defenses, "as happened on the night of Sept. 1."

The general said the main task of fighter pilots who intercept intruders is to identify them. Then, he said, pilots must act "decisively and without delay," in conformity with regulations on the violation of Soviet air-

TUNIS - President Habib Bourguiba of Tunisia has dismissed his interior minister and added the portfolio to that of Prime Minister Mohamed Mzali.

The changes Saturday ended speculation that Mr. Mzali might lose his job because of rioting over an increase in the price of bread. Mr. Bourguiba rescinded the price increase Friday after the violence had caused an unknown number of deaths Interior Minister Driss Guiga, who was in charge of the police and local administration, was evidently chosen to take the blame for not preventing the riots. Nonetheless, Mr. Mzali paid Mr. Guiga routine tribute for a job well done. No official reason for his removal was Tunisia continued under the

Soviet Journal Discovers Big Brother — in the White House

By John F. Burns New York Times Service

MOSCOW - A Soviet political journal claims to have pinpointed the real-life version of George Orwell's novel "1984" - in the United States, under a "Big Brother" named Ronald Reagan.

The current issue of the weekly New Times, published in Russian and in several foreign languages, including English, contends that all the characteristics of Orwell's nightmare society, including Newspeak, the Thought Police and a Ministry of Truth, have their counterparts in modern America.

The article broke a silence that Soviet news organizations have maintained on the Orwell book in recent weeks. While Western publications heralded the new year with profiles of Orwell and fresh assessments of his most famous work, Soviet journals shunned the

Mr. Tsoppi sought to bolster his case with quotations from "1984," the first time in the memory of Westerners here that the novel has been quoted directly. One quote came from one of the book's most powerful passages, depicting Oceania, which includes Britain and the Americas, as a place where insistent propaganda and surveillance have produced a society in which "complete uniformity of view on all subjects"

That sequence has often been cited by critics of the Soviet Union as evocative of the worst aspects of Stalinism. But Mr. Tsoppi found in it a reflection of modern America, where, he said, the "rule of omnipo-tent Big Brother, who is changed every four years, is undivided and uncontrolled."

The sources said a secret document intercepted from the group had expressed disappointment with the failure of the anti-missile demonstra-tions in October to hinder deployment of the missiles. "That must now be changed," the letter said. "We cannot be frustrated now, but must attack with all resources in the coming months."

Swiss Socialists Draft Coalition Plan

BERN (AP) - The leaders of Switzerland's Social Democratic Party, the principal loser in October's general election, completed preparations during the weekend for a possible departure from the government

The party's executive committee finished drafting a paper that will he discussed at an extraordinary party congress Feb. 1I and 12. Although the paper lists several alternatives, Hehmut Hubacher, the party president, and a majority of the committee reportedly are in favor of endingthe coalition with its non-Socialist partners.

The issue of leaving the coalition arose last month after Parliament failed to back Lilian Uchtenhagen, the Socialists' official candidate and the first woman to stand for the country's seven-member Federal Council. Instead, the Parliament elected Otto Stich, who was refused party support, to fill the Social Democratic vacancy in the council.

Coffee Ads on TV Brew Up a Storm

A television advertising campaign seeking to woo a "new coffee generation" among young adults has come under fire from a consumer advocacy group as misleading and dishonest. Using rock musicians, sports stars and theater personslities, the commercials, sponsored by the National Coffee Association and the International Coffee Organization, promote collec as a drink of young achievers. But the Center for Science in the Public Interest is particularly incensed that the commercials portray coffee as a security-inducing heverage. Collec, the ads assert, "lets you calm yourself down and picks

Instead, argues the Center for Science director, Michael Jacobson, "The caffeine in coffee is a stimulant of the central nervous system and promotes anxiety, jitters and insomnia, not calmness or serenity." His group has asked the Federal Trade Commission, which po-lices advertising, to halt the coffee industry's claims.
U.S. coffee consumption has been sliding for the past 20 years, and the new $20-million campaign is part of the indus-try's effort to arrest the decline among the 18- to 34-year-olds. The industry says that in 1962, 81 percent of Americans 20 to years old drank coffee; in 1983, only 42 percent of that target age group were coffee drinkers. Meanwhile, soft drink consumption has boomed over the last two decades.

William J. Brooks of the National Coffee Association denied that normal coffee consumption caused health problems cated by the consumer group. And, he added: "Ask most people who drink coffee what they get out of a coffee break and they'll tell you it's a relaxing moment that restores vitality - and that's exactly what we mean.'

A Daiquiri Toast To Army and Navy

The Army and Navy Club in Washington, which has claimed the daiquiri, the rum and lime juice drink, as its own ever since a member supposedly intro-duced it to the United States, has closed its doors for a two-year construction project.

The club's roster has included such names such as Grant Pershing Nimitz, MacArthur, Eisenhower and Patton, but it now lists only about 800 members — whose average age is in the low 60s. Club officials hope new facilities such as squash and racketball courts will boost the membership of the 99-year-old club, which also has a 22,000-volume library of military history. Club lore has it that Admiral Lucius W. Johnson, then a young medical officer aboard the Minnesora, discovered the daiquiri in 1909 at Daiquiri Beach in Cuba, where Americans landed during the Spanish-American War. Last week, members downed 10 gallons (more than 37 liters) of the club's official drink at closing ceremonies for their old clubhouse on Washington's Farragnt Square.

WASHINGTON — President Ronald Reagan has opened a new administration campaign against "unruly behavior" in schools, announcing that the Justice Depart-ment would file court briefs to help expand the rights of teachers and administrators to enforce school

In his weekly radio address Saturday, Mr. Reagan also said that the Department of Education would study methods to prevent school violence and help local school districts use their resource to prevent school crime. White House officials said that Mr. Reagan would receive a report Monday from an administration working group on school violence and disci oline, which Reagan advisers said they hoped would be a key issue in the election campaign.
In his speech Saturday, Mr. Reagan said that "we can't get learning back into our schools until we get the crime and violence out." He said the issue was "not a question of anyone asking for a police state' and then quoted with approval a comment by Albert Shanker, president of the American Federation of Teachers, on the need to solve discipline problems and "take out of our schools those students who prevent teachers from teaching." In the Democratic response to the address, Representative Robert T. Lebanon: Signs of Hope

It is characteristic that even as a break appears in the clouds over Lebanon, new shooting and new political conflict occur, with the result that the modest gains are threatened. Lebanon's history of heartbreak is a standing warning against unwarranted optimism. Still. some intriguing signs are evident.

President Amin Gemayel is promoting a security plan whose promise is to expand the army and police beyond the current narrow Beirut circumference into areas of the country not controlled by foreign occupiers. A related effort - necessarily related, because the government cannot extend its authority without broadening its base — is being made to resume the talks on an internal political settlement that started and stalled two months ago.

If it is too early to foresee the fate of these two enterprises, it is possible to see why they are coming about now. Just as the deployment of the multinational force steadied the Gemayel government and encouraged it to start striving for national reconciliation, so that force's move toward the exit door has stirred the government to an extra internal effort.

The Syrians seem to be in a mood to convert the military pressures they have applied and sponsored for the last few months toto something of political value. They signaled this by sending home the downed American flier with Jesse Jackson. The United States responded promptly by removing one of its carriers from the sea off Lebanon. On their part, the Israelis, who are sadder and wiser for the failure of their previous attempts to manipulate Lebanese politics, are increasingly of a mind to let a made-in-Lebanon compromise take shape. The value for its own sake of movement nese political settlement needs oo embellishing. Such movement could also leave the U.S. Marines and the other MNF forces safer, and thereby reduce the political pressure for their precipitate removal. It could end and perhaps reverse the escalation that last month produced the first-ever combat between American and Arab forces. We do not say that all these results have now come clearly into view. Almost any progress toward them, however, would be a blessing — and a relief and a political boon to Ronald Reagan.

Lebanon's third major need, after internal security and a political settlement, is the withdrawal of all foreign forces. That is the key to restoration of territorial integrity and sover-eign pride. Is this dreaming? The casualties that fuel Israel's drive to get out continue, and so do the reprisals that lead to further casualties. Another sliding Israeli redeployment, this time with provisions for filling the resultant vacuum, is in the works. Damascus insists that with withdrawal of the multinational force and Israel's remaining forces, it would remove its troops, too. Its capacity to guide events in Lebanon without a direct military hand lends some credence to this position.

In the best of circumstances Lebanon still faces injuries and insults that no nation with a choice would countenance. Its point of reference, however, is not Swiss-style tranquillity but the savagery and indignity that have dogged its national life almost without cease since the mid-1970s. Maybe there is no salvation here, but it is surely worth pursuing the few signs of hope that have appeared.

Discipline in the Schools

President Reagan wants to restore "good old-fashioned discipline" in schools. Fine. That is an important issue, and it is good to hear the president sound an alarm. But in the process be distorts his education priorities and wrongly inflates what should be a matter of ential local concern. What is the man who wants to get national government off local backs doing with the ruler to his hand?

The sometimes terrifying violence that af-flicted some schools in the 1960s and early 70s has waned. Still, discipline is a serious problem that teachers cite as one of their main concerns. The widely desired excellence to educa-tion cannot flourish unless troublemakers are kept from disrupting classrooms.

But Mr. Reagan's approach fails in two respects: how to alleviate the problem, and who should be responsible. Getting tough with troublemakers sounds good bot misses at least half the point. What the administration has done so far makes the other half worse.

Suspension and expulsion should be reserved for students guilty of crimes, including violence. For lesser offenses it is far preferable to find disciplinary measures that keep troublemaking students in school. It will not discipline a youngster to push him into a world of almost certain unemployment and crime.

Many in-school efforts succeed. These stress parental involvement and counseling for disruptive students. But many in-school programs have suffered because of Reagan budget cuts. The Emergency School Aid Act provided some help for such programs, but it disap-peared in 1981 into a block grant funded at only 85 percent of the previous level. Such efforts should be encouraged, not abandoned. The administration has been particularly myopic about minority groups. They are twice as likely as whites to be victimized by school crime, but they are also twice as likely to be suspended from school. Where is the concern about unemployment for black youth? Other measures that can restore discipline like reducing class size or hiring more guidance counselors, are costly. However, when it comes to education President Reagan is generous only with words. School discipline is mainly for school districts and parents to solve. They need help, not more moralism

Reagan Plus Arafat in 1984? President Reagan's decision to accept help for his West Bank peace plan from Yasser Arafat sent this message to an ootraged Israel and a startled American Jewish community: West Bank peace has higher political value than traditional election-year bidding for Jewish support. The president conveyed that message to Secretary of State George Shultz in a recent Oval Office chat.

Mr. Reagan agreed with Mr. Shultz that if Mr. Arafat's help brings Jordan's King Hussein into direct talks with Israel, Mr. Reagan would oot hesitate to apply maximum pressure on the Israelis if they balked at going to the negotiating table. That sets the stage for Mr. Reagan and the Democratic nominee to battle for the small but important Jewish vote.

WASHINGTON — If this is the year that United States troops go into El Salvador, will the Reagan administration keep the news media away, as it did in Grenada? It doesn't take a key to the secret war plans locker at the Pentagon to know that the most luscious dream of the Joint Chiefs is an antiseptic surgical strike with no television cameras or report-ers snooping around until the triumphal march up Pennsylvania Avenue. Those who read General Maxwell

D. Taylor's "Swords and Ploughshares" (1972) remember that he thought the Vietnam War could have been won if only the media could have been kept away. So it was not surprising to learn from an interview with him published last week that this is still his answer when asked how future wars can be won.

This animus against the media goes beyond the battlefield. In his book the general blamed the press for "a campaign of defamation" against "the presidency, the Congress, the courts, the church and business." We could repeal the First Amendment. General Taylor's is the third voice m recent weeks to treat the media as the enemy. This sinister new chorus began when Secretary of State George Shultz observed, in connection with Grenada, that reporters had gone along with the troops in World War II because in those days the media were on "our side."

Then the American Broadcasting

By I.F. Stone

Company's feisty Sam Donaldson challenged Ronald Reagan to explain just what "our side" meant, at the president's press conference on Dec. 20. Mr. Reagan tephed that, starting with the Korean War and "certainly" in Vietnam, the media were oo longer on "our side, militarily."

No one can shoot poisoned arrows more amiably than Mr. Reagan. He has a genius for the subliminal shir. The victim often doesn't realize what hit him. This was in effect saying that if the media are not "on our side, militarily," why should they be al-initially," why should they be allowed to go along with the troops? The phrasing implies treason.

Now, the truth about those "limited wars" is that they were fought against an enemy too far away and too small to qualify as a real threat to U.S. national security. That is why in oeither case did presidents dare ask Congress for declarations of war. The wars just didn't make sense to people back home. Indeed, two presidential elections were won - both by Republicans — on a promise (Dwight Eisenhower in 1952, Richard Nixon in 1972) to end them.

The media were, at first, too going ho in both wars. They did not foment the disenchantment on the home front. They lagged behind it. Winston Churchill did not rally

Britain in its most frightening bour with phony press releases but with the bitter, invigorating truth — the kind the media are often criticized for supplying. The best way to under mine morale in a war is to let the public sense that it is being fed pap. Now here is General Taylor adding a new dimension to the drive for an American iron curtain around future war zones. "I believe strongly," he said, "that people have a right to know what their forces are doing, but not today, not tomorrow, but at the appropriate time." The general did not explain what would be the appropriate time. But he made clear that he wanted the story not only delayed but wrapped up with appropriate packaging. The people, he implied, would not know what to do with the madomed truth. This is what the general said: "If they [the people] get the information

ON Oct. 27, a senior administra-tion official told reporters that there were 1,150 armed Cubans on Grenada and there had been no civilian casualties. On the same day the controlled press in Cuba accurately reported that the Cuban contingent numbered 750 and there had been civilian casualties.

ft is an irony of this anti-communist administration that the Grenada affair was one of the few instances in history when citizens of a communist state knew more about what was going on than Americans did. Four days later, officials confirmed the Cuban numbers and admitted that civilians had been killed at an accidentally bombed mental hospital.

Perhaps someone who cares about Mr. Reagan should remind him that he once spoke out on the record in favor of freedom of the press, and deplored information-control practices in other administrations that were less onerons than his own.

ly or indirectly ... " And "indirect-ly," of course, means the military. The president, then, is to decide when and what to disclose about what happens on the battlefield. The general summed up his new constitutional doctrine in one succinct phrase: "He gets paid for that."

The president gets paid to be the nation's super copy editor! Order NASA to launch a manned space station as soon as possible.

This sounds like a mere bureaucratic shuffle, but the implications are enormous. It is revealing that the navy is not mentioned.

That is evidently because there is a direct conflict between the navy's requirements in space and the ambitions of the Air Force Space Command.
The navy depends on satellites for its strategic missions; they are needed for navigation, communication and guidance of submarme-launched missiles. So the navy has to worry about development of anti-satellite weapons and space-based weapoos that would render it blind and deaf. The Air Force Space Command, on the contrary, seeks a panoply of arms in space. It believes war in space is inevitable, fighting in space will be "the decisive form of military power" and the United States will win if it hurries.

This argument is not about defense but offense. The aim, candidly stated by Air Force Space Command planners, is to restore "pre-atomic notions of military superiority," to "make conflict at the upper levels of military violence [ouclear attack] again thinkable." They say this would be an "invigorating turn of events for the spiritual vitality of the Western democracies." The bill would give the people who bold this Strangelovian view a strong bureaucratic base and vested interests from which to dominate future lobbying for the bundreds of billions of dollars that their plans would require. This is really a first, deliberate step to Star Wars, and that is why the planners are so keen on a manned space station. They are not satisfied with the idea of robots and computers up there. They want to send people to fight. Of course noce of this is mentioned to public. On the contrary, Representative Kramer calls his proposed legislation a "Manhattan Project for peace." He offers it in support of President Reagan's call to develop a space-based defense against missiles as the magic formula to end the nuclear menace. "Isn't it time we stopped holding the American people hostage to the threat of nuclear war? Mr. Kramer said to committee testimony. "Unless we are willing to accept the prospect of a nuclear Pearl Harbor from space, we must now join the president to a new national commitment to mutually assured protection." To begin with, there are the gravest scientific no reputable scientist, even among those who want to try, claims that it would be complete. One percent of present arsenals would be enough to destroy America and the Soviet Union. Even if the system were complete, it could not stop cruise missiles, bombers, suicidal trucks and other ways of delivering atomic death. Further, foiling the defense system would be 10 times easier and many more times cheaper. Meanwhile there would surely be another spurt in the missile race to overwhelm the possibility of defenses. Nor is there the slightest sign that the goal of "mutually assured protection" means what it other nuclear powers - the Russians, and also the British, French, Chinese and anybody else who brandishes atomic arms — shared defense technology as it is developed. That is the opposite of the Air Force Space Command's idea. It is cruel to create the illusion that this way lies deliverance from nuclear terror. And it is harmful to the cohesion of American society, for already some people are beginning to charge disloyalty and even treason against scientists who express honest, reasoned opposition. There has been no U.S. response to last sum-appears to be in oo mood to make a serious effort to accommodate the United States.

Many Americans find it tempting to blame the Resean administration for the crosion of the superpowers' relations. The president and his top advisers have surely engaged in some unnecessary and reckless provoca-tions. Yet the Kremlin's defiant attitude cannot be explained solely by Mr. Reagan's actions. There are profound political and psychological reasons - many of them totally unconnected with anything the United States has done or said — why the Soviet establishment is ill-prepared to seek a genuine thaw.

The nasty mood in Moscow is rooted in a general climate of extreme anxiety and anger. That climate fa-

At the end of Leonid Brezhnev's rule the Soviet establishment had even less to cheer about, but there was bope then that the gloomy state of affairs would not last long. Building an Image of Incompetence

Ronald Reagan responded by promising Americans that their na-made image, that of masterful pro-tector of the weak, enemy of totali-tarianism. It was a welcome one,

even when, in the case of Grenada its realization was a trifle bogus.

The danger was that image de-fined policy: Action was taken after the fact to justify commitments assumed for the sake of the image thereby projected. A commitment of U.S. Marines to Lebanon was "strong." But what were they to do when they were there? To the American public, it was their presence that became the problem.

The Reagan administration had become newly involved in the Middle East on terms, and with a lack of saleguards, that no earlier Amer-to accept. Wishing to convey an image of decision and strength, the government has hesitated over two

His ascent to power would open unique opportunities to improve the U.S.-Soviet relationship. It was important for the United States not to miss the chance, my friend advised. My friend is no liberal. He insisted that the Russian people lacked a sense of responsibility and therefore occded the whip of harsh discipline. He was also proud of Moscow's superpower status and argued that it was crucial for the Soviet Union to cut Ronald Reagan down to size. But this official and many others like him were aware that a whip alone would out be enough to resolve the complex domestic problems of an industrial society. In foreign policy, they realized that constant displays of arrogant heavy-handedness could do more harm than good.

level of Soviet leadership expected that the government's emphasis on tough internal discipline would be coupled with far-reaching decentralization of the economy. They anticipated that standing up to the U.S. challenge would be accompanied by an imaginative international strategy to outmaneuver Mr. Reagan and then bring him to the bargaining table on terms favorable to Moscow.

That optimistism was clearly mis-placed. The modest economic experiments planned for this year will not make up for the lack of fundamental reform. In foreign affairs, Moscow is facing stalemate all around: The war in Afghanistan continues; negotia-tions with China are stalled; in the Middle East, despite all their aid to Syria, the Russians have little leverage over Damascus. Nor have Soviet designs to split America from Western Europe met with success. The Communist political machinery is once again failing to deliver - and the Soviet elite is well aware of it. ed in doubts about the Soviet model of economic development. It is this sense of vulnerability mixed with anger that colors the Soviet response to the Reagan administration. At this moment of transition, then, the Soviet Union represents neither a terrible danger nor an exciting diplomatic opportunity for America. The Soviet ruling group feels overextended and unappreciated by the rest of the world. Facing the United States cycball-to-eyeball is the last thing on the Kremlin's mind, unless escalation and miscalculation push it further into a corner. Nor, however, does the Soviet leadership seem committed to seeking a peaceful engagement with Washington, From Moscow's point of view, the best way to deal with the United States today is stonewalling rather than accommodation.

Secretary of State George Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko are expected to talk in-Stockholm on Jan. 18. They may politely smile at each other for the sake of diplomacy. But handshakes do not mean reconciliation — just as chill does not mean war.

The 20th century thus confronts Moslem leaders with a great challenge: whether to continue to adhere to an ideology of jihad, which might conceivably engulf the world in a nuclear disaster, or to strive for a profound renewal of hearts and minds, leading to acceptance of the infidel as a fellow human being who is everywhere the same, with his hopes and sufferings.
Some modern leaders and intellec-

By Christopher S. Wren New York Tones Service

XIAMEN, China - A bronze statue of Chen Jiageng, with his Panama hat and cane, was unveiled in great ceremony some months ago in this southeastern port city. Mr. Chen started no revolutions, led no armies, wrote no masterpieces. He is revered because he left China and made a lot of money.

Mr. Chen, known overseas as Tan Kah-kee, emigrated from Kia-men, which at the time was called Amoy, in 1900 and made a fortune as a rubber magnate in Singapore. Before his death in 1961, he had sent home enough money to endow a university and scores of secondary and primary schools. He was, in short, the kind of model emigrant that China is looking for today.

Twenty million ethnic Chinese,

by Beijing's estimate, live overseas.
A wall map in Xiamen's Overseas Chinese Museum pinpoints their whereabouts—4.5 million in Thailand, 4.2 million in Malaysia, a million in the United States, down to 14 in Paragnay and 10 in Iraq.

Such emigrants, though they left China generations ago, are considered a potential source of capital and technological talent that the Chinese leadership hopes to tap for its modernization drive. The result is a campaign to court the affections of the hunging, a term for overseas Chinese that means "bridges to China."

Chen Pixian, a senior official of the Communist Party Secretariat, recently told the Zhigong Dang, or Public Interest Party, an organization of returned overseas Chinese, that the unity of the hungino with relatives at home contributed to

Egyptian Political Party Resurfaces After Court Rejects Official Ban

By Judith Miller New York Times Service

CAIRO --- After more than 30 years of single-party dominance, officials here say a genuine political opposition is beginning to emerge.

Two developments last week al-tered Egypt's political landscape and could pose a challenge to President Hosni Mubarak and his National Democratic Party, Western and Egyptian analysts say.

A high-level Egyptian court last Monday rejected government efforts to block the reformation of the New Ward Party, once the most popular and powerful political group in Egypt.

Two days later, the leftist National Progressive Unionist Party defeated the ruling party in a run-off election for parliament in a dis-trict of Alexandria.

The closeness of the contest and official announcement of an extremely low voter turnout, about 10 percent, led analysts to conclude that President Mubarak may intend to honor a pledge for impar-tial parliamentary elections scheduled for May.

Prospects for the New Wafd and four other opposition parties would he enhanced by free and honest elections, which are rare in Egypt.

Analysts said honest elections would particularly benefit the New Wafd, whose rebirth was widely regarded as among the most significant developments in some time. The right-of-center Wafd has traditionally opposed socialism, favored free enterprise and attracted a nationwide following, from intel-lectuals to small landowners and The Wafd has yet to articulate many domestic or foreign policy goals. But analysts said it could have broad-based political appeal. Some predicted it could even pose a popular alternative to Mr. Mubark's National Democratic Party.

Formed in 1918, the Wald, which means "delegation," spearheaded Egypt's movement for independence from Britain. After a 1923 treaty that made Egypt virtually independent, the party was elected to power on several occasions, most recently in 1950.

Nevertheless, it and other opposition parties face an uphill battle because of a law enacted last summer at Mr. Mubarak's behest. Cambodia Marks Its 5th Year of Pro-Hanoi Rule

PHNOM PENH - Seven thousand Cambodian troops and civilians marched through ceotral Phnom Penh to mark the fifth anni versary of President Heng Samrin's pro-Vietnamese government. Mr. Heng Samrin, whose government replaced the Khmer Rouge in 1979 with Vietnamese military assistance, said during a rally Saturday that the situation in Cambodia was irreversible. But he acknowledged at the rally, attended by officials from Viet-nam, Laos and the Soviet Union, that guerrilla activities of the anti-Vietnamese rebel coalition still hampered his administration's reconstruction efforts. That coalition comprises forces loyal to the former head of state, Prince Norodom Sihanouk, to his former prime minister, Son Sann, and to the Khmer Rouge. The forces operate mainly from bases along the Thai-Cambodian border.

Mr. Heng Samrin said that "complication" was all but inevitable in "the struggle by our people against the enemy's war of systemreconstruction." But he said that his government would prevail.

Pre-Election Polls Boost

3.8 million voters will elect a new parliament Tuesday in what many observers believe will be an ideological showdown between the country's long-established socialism and its new conservatism. Voter opinion polls indicate a landslide for Prime Minister Poul Schluter, 54, a Conservative, and his 16-month-old coalition over the opposition Social Democrats, the country's biggest party.

After a year of national economic improvements, the voter surveys idicate that the Conservatives may double their current 26 seats in the 179-seat Folketing, or parlia-

They also indicate, however, that some of the Conservative gains could be at the expense of the party's Liberal, Center-Democrat and Christian coalition partners.

A poli by the Observa Institute published last week in the conservative newspaper Jyllands-Posten said 49 percent of the voters want Mr. Schluter to continue as government leader. Mr. Jorgensen was the choice of 31 percent.

That could end a series of foreign policy defeats for the government, mainly caused by the Socialists, who forced Denmark to break with its partners in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and oppose the immediate siting of new U.S. Pershing-2 and cruise missiles in Western Europe.

Although military matters are hotly debated in Denmark, the election campaign has centered on economics. Mr. Schluter called the election Dec. 15, before his fouryear term was up, when his 1984 finance bill became the first budget in 54 years to be rejected by the Folketing.

The hudget bill was aimed at reducing Denmark's substantial deficit by cutting public spending.
The Social Democrats, led by former Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen, 61, have focused their campaign on the country's jobless rate of about 10.5 percent.

As to Turkish fears of Greece, I find them hard to believe. Turkey has a population of 40,000,000. Our population has not yet reached 10,000,000. Turkey has occupied northern Cyprus since 1974 and has claims on the seabed and the surspace of the Aegean. We have no claims against Turkey. Turkish fear of Greece is hardly explicable.

Observers Split on Direction of Interest Rates

By Michael Quint New York Times Service

NEW YORK - Observers of U.S. credit markets are divided into two roughly even camps --- those expecting rates to rise this year and those expecting lower rates by the middle of the year.

The economic evidence does not yet seem overwhelming in favor of ither camp, as new data show the U.S. economy growing at a brisk pace, though less rapidly than the April-September period. The trend in long-term Treasury bond yields, confidence and a benchmark for such other interest rates as home mortgages, has been upward since early October, when the bellwether 12-percent Treasury issue, due 2013, was yielding about 11.3 per-

Floating-Rate Notes Are Overshadowing Syndicated Loans

By Carl Gewirtz Herald Tribane

PARIS -- In sharp contrast to the international capital market, activity in syndicated bank loans got off to a slow start this year with only a few relatively modest deals

Most experts expect the Euroband market to dominate the bankloan market, with quality borrow-ers issuing floating-rate notes rather than trying to arrange loans.

This is explained by the continuing attraction of floating-rate notes to investors who want to maximize their interest income while at the same time keeping their holdings as liquid as possible in case interest rates or the dollar's exchange rate

At the same time, many banks "that normally participate in the credit market appear to prefer to put their money into floaters because the marketability of these securities offers them considerably more flexibility for managing their holdings. In addition, banks are attracted by the profit potential.

In a period when many commercial banks are under pressure from their home authorities to increase profits, floaters have much appeal. ssions can be booked immediately and the notes subsequently sold in the secondary market resulting in no growth of the bank's balance sheet alance sheet. In contrast, commissions generated on syndicated loans are taken as income over the life of the loan which is held to maturity and inflates the balance sheet.

As a result of the large demand; for floaters, the terms borrowers can achieve are considerably more attractive than can be had in the tant for the largest commercial as 10 years are significantly longer ness that might not otherwise come shakeout in the floating-rate-note market will result in more homogeneous terms with the bank credit market. But until that happens, floaters will continue to appeal to those quality borrowers who have

For example, Aerospatiale, the French state-owned aeronantical company, is discussing borrowing as much as $200 million and is expected to raise most of this through a floating-rate note. If the amount is deemed too big for the public market to take, a smaller portion may be raised as a syndi-

Denmark, which sold $500 million of floating-rate notes last October, is expected to be back looking for money soon after this week's election is out of the way. floating-rate note than a bank loan, shortly,

On the other hand, such regular borrowers as Denmark also have to keep an eye out to stay in favor with their traditional bankers. The floating-rate-note market may not always be available, so long stand-ing relationships with international banks are not lightly jettisoned.

These relationships are impor-

ing short-term trade finance or letters of credit and the like.

Thus, the biggest banks, which usually organize syndicated credits, will be urging borrowers to tap that

To attract the borrowers, commercial banks most likely will be forced to compromise: Terms on credits will be lower than they might otherwise have been but still remain higher than those of floating-rate notes. It remains to be seen bow far banks will be willing to cut margins as the reluctance to increase assets should temper competition to attract new business.

In addition, as the business recovery progresses corporate loan demand should keep banks busy trying to satisfy their domestic cli-

Nevertheless, bankers report that Denmark could probably expect to be offered a margin starting at % of a point over Libor for a syndicated credit, compared with the split 1/2-1/4 percent it had been

Portugal and Greece are also beginning to discuss their cash needs with bankers. If Indonesia can tap the floating-rate-note market, albeit not very successfully, Portugal and bankers acknowledge that it and Greece also ought to be able to, could get better terms through a Whether they do should be decided million Australian dollars in a Furonote facility, an operation that loan and a capital market transac-

The arrangement resembles a syndicated credit insofar as a group of banks is being put together to take these 15-year notes. (A sinking fund reduces the average life of the notes to 12% years.) However, every six months the notes, denominated in units of $250,000, will be offered to a panel of banks invited to tender for them.

The tender panel will bid for the notes at a discount from face value. The yield derived from being repaid at par will be limited to a maximum equivalent of %-point over Libor. The bidding banks can then sell the paper to private clients, at a lower discount or hold

If bids are deemed unacceptable, the underwriters will take the paper. For this, they earn an annual fee of 15 basis points.

Assuming that the notes are sold at 1/4 point over Libor, the total in cost to the borrower is estimated to total 28 basis points. If, as managers deem more likely, the notes are sold at the equivalent of Libor, the cost to the utility will total an even thinner 15 basis points over Libor. In South Korea, Hankuk Glass than the five-to-seven-year loans to them - managing some of a Thayer Insider Case Likely To Stem Criticism of SEC

By Jeff Gerth New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - The insider trading case filed last week by the Securities and Exchange Commis-sion against Paul Thayer and eight others may be the most important enforcement action the agency has brought during the tenure of its chairman, John S.R. Shad.

Mr. Shad, who took over as chairman in the spring of 1981, has been widely criticized in Washington for what his critics say is laxness in enforcing securities laws.

The high visibility of the case -Mr. Thayer resigned as deputy sco-retary of defense over the charges -has reminded some present and former officials of earlier cras, when the commission's enforce-ment actions were often in the

And by adding Getty's natural gas reserves, which total 2.7 trillion enbic feet, Texaco total 2.7 trillion cubic feet, Texaco than willing to dispose of any Getty would increase its reserves of gas to refineries or retail outlets that 14.3 trillion cubic feet.

"For Texaco, this may go down as a master stroke," said Timothy J. Quaid of the brokerage house F. Eberstadt & Co.

Texaco has been showing signs of breaking out of its conservati-vism ever since John K. McKinley, now 63, was appointed chairman and chief executive officer in 1980. For example, Mr. McKinley has increasingly sent the company hunting for oil and gas in previously unexplored areas. Texaco, among others, has invested heavily Barbara, California, where a major discovery was reported in late 1982, came up dry last month.

Two smaller acquisitions last year reflected a growing willingness to chart new directions. In September, Texaco agreed to buy a refinery and 2,600 service stations in Europe from Standard Oil Co. of California. And in November it agreed to buy the relatively small U.S. exploration and production properties of Dome Petroleum Inc., the troubled Canadian oil concern. In both cases, Texaco declined to say how much it was paying. Texaco could face federal antitrust problems in its bid for Getty. Both companies operate refineries One result has been that Texaco in California and have service stafilled its bank accounts with more tions in the same states in the

"What they want is the reserves," said Edward P. Reilly of Fahnstock & Co.

A bigger question for Texaco may be how severe a drain the acquisition would be on earnings. Despite its cash reserve of more than $2 billion, interest payments on debt it might accumulate in the transaction "would clearly be a wide oil reserves, analysts said the drain on the bottom line for some time to come," said Mr. Ilacqua at L.F. Rothchild. For the next few years, he said, "the return on this kind of investment will be very unlikely to have any pressing need for the added reserves for several years. As a reflection of its shrinking appetite for crude oil, Texaco has reduced purchases from Saudi Arabia, where it produces and buys oil as a minority partner in Arabian American Oil Co.

No Aramco partner discloses how much Saudi oil it is huying, but Dillard P. Spriggs, president of Petroleum Analysis Ltd., suggested that Texaco's Aramco purchases in the first nine months of 1983 slumped to 637,000 barrels a day. He said this compared with 988,000 barrels a day in 1982 and more than two million a day in 1981.

Measured against the long-term decline that is expected in worldoil and gas company, should be new reserves through exploration On that basis, Mr. Quaid of F. GENTLEMEN OF ADVENTURE as a pleasant reliew to have around, mough his stories may begin to run together.

A leading chronicler of flight, Gann has been spinning tales about aviation for decades. His first book appeared before World War II, "The High and The Mighty" was published in 1953, and several of his best-sellers have been made into more several. made into movies.

So "Gentlemen of Adventure" is a journey through familiar skies. Sweeping from 1905, two years after the Wright brothers' flight, to 1963, it tracks the airplane's rise from "a questionable plaything . . . to the most powerful system of destruction and potential for victory ever known." In what Gann terms "fictional history," the story develops through three characters: raffish Kiffin Draper; resolute Toby Bryant, Draper's best friend; and longsuffering Lily Cranwell Bryant, Bryant's wife and Draper's dream. One tableau, early in the book, projects vividly where Gann is beading: ft's 1915, and young Draper is quarierbacking Nebraska's football team against Iowa. Suddenly he freezes in mid-play, gazing into the sky as the first plane he's ever seen rumbles overhead. lowa players snatch the ball from his hands and hustle into the end zone. Draper stares at the beavens (with, we visualize, the sort of enraptured expression Carl Sagan often wore in television's "Cosmos"), and a pilot is born. From there, it's a story of boy meets plane, boy gets plane, boy loses plane. Our jaunty heroes volunteer for the French Foreign Legion in World War I, barnstorm as the Great Draper Flying Circus, smuggle whiskey from Cuba, fly the mails with Charles (Slim) Lindbergh, defend the Spanish Loyalists against Franco, serve with the RAF in World War II,

Solution to Friday's Puzzle

and settle in to organize TWA and test-pilot for Lockheed. Ruhbing goggles with Howard Hughes, Wiley Post and Amelia Earhart, they hopscotch the world in their Penguins, Jennies, Nieuports, Caudrons, DH-4s and DC-1s.

Life is turbulent. Toby Bryant smashes his 50-horsepower Bleriot into a French church, is shot down by friendly artillery on the western front, and crashes into a stone quarry after German gunners shoot off his crewman's face. Draper nurses a frozen engine to earth behind German lines, cracks up and loses a leg in the National Air Races and is knocked out of the sky, literally, by an enemy plane over Spain. Lily Bryant, belatedly deciding on flying ("Toby knew from that moment on that he had married the right woman"), nearly dies when her scarf gets tangled during a daredevil wing-walking stunt. With all its action, however, this is not at heart a novel of plot and character. Its themes are more the drama of flight than of the human condition. Its chief characters are more the planes Gann knows and adores (and, incidentally, has flown himself) than the rather stiff human beings (reminiscent, at times, of those characters in old movies who stand still while the backdrop moves).

The characterization of Lily Bryant is especially troublesome. The idea, apparently, is to show her as a spunky, early liberated woman. While it's unfair to evaluate her by 1980s rules, the portrait does seem contrived. At one point she's referred to as "Mrs. Spoiled Brat," after she has endured, with only wee complaint. Draper's arrival to live with her and her young husband, displacement from Europe's capitals to Nebraska's plains, the poverty of barnstorming the prairie, camping in cow fields and dining on cold pork and beans, a near-fatal career as a daredevil who changes planes in the air and, most serious, a drunken rape by Drap-er, which she chooses not to reveal to her husband so as oot to spoil the men's friendship. You'll have little trouble guessing what she does with the evil Spanish colonel in order to get Draper released from military prison.

Yet, all that said, "Gentlemen of Adventure" has an earnest charm. The book succeeds, not because of hterary stylishness or descriptive elegance but because we share Gann's romantic affection for the aircraft and air people of the trailblazing age.

In a sense, this is a love story. Gann has a cometimes lyrical appreciation for the exquisite solitude, terrors and splendors of flight, a nostalgie admiration for the gung-ho, go-for-it pluck of the first pilots. Like Twain and his river, Gann's muse is the sky. In an age where, 'Space" and "The Right Stuff" have popular ized the glories of outer space, Gann provides a closer-to-Earth counterpoint, charting space cadethood in its infancy.

Gann's fliers are to the Space Age heroes of Michener and Wolfe what leather-belmeted old-time fontball players are to loday's drill-precision Dallas Cowboys, and we recall them with a food feeling. "Gentlemen of Adventure" doesn't rocket majestically skyward like Friendship 7. It tends to rustle and chug through choppy skies, with a simple spiril that is, at last, hard to resist.

Carl Sessions Stepp teaches at the University of Maryland College of Journalism. He wrote this review for The Washington Past.

Dipping Into Skinny

By William Safire WASHINGTON — In a recent piece, I referred to a leak from the Justice Department as "a pud-dle of hot, inside skinny."

Seeing those words in print, 1 experienced the emotion that Frank Mankiewicz has named a klong, the suddeo rush of minor horror that seizes your heart when you realize you have forgotten your own dinner party and everyone probably showed up two hours ago. pounded on your door and left in

The reason for my klong in this case is the meaning of skinny. It means "inside information, the real lowdown, the hot poop," As it appeared — "inside skinny" — it was hopelessly redundant or, as some members of the Squad Squad have pointed out, redunduodant All skinny is, ipso facto, "inside," and inside skinny is as unnecessarily repetitive as Tom Brokaw's description of China as "exorically foreign" or the decision hy the town fathers of St. Petersburg, Florida, to name a square "Plaza Place," thereby squaring the square.

"Was your reference to a puddle of hot, inside skinny intended to utillate," asks Joan Ross of New York City, "or have I missed a leak somewhere? I don't even know what cold, inside skinny is."

l assumed it was a slang term widely understood. For example, it appeared in John Carmody's television column in The Washington Post a few weeks ago: "We'll give you the full skinny tomorrow."

A search of all the slang anthorities, from Hotteo and Farmer of the 19th century to Partridge and Flexner of the 20th, with a side chase into all my dictionaries of Americanisms and all the current general dictionaries at hand, turns up no such meaning for skinny as the latest scoop from Group." We are oot concerned with the meaning of skinny as an adjective, which used to be "excessively thin" and is oow "attractively slender." We are on the track of skinny as a noun. In that part of speech, skinny has been reported as denoting a class in chemistry at Annapolis; a similar ooun, skin-a-guas, is a very thin person, and a skinner was a member of a marauding gang pro-fessing allegiance to the American cause during the Revolution. Obviously, none of these previous noun

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Stuart Berg Flexner, placed oo the spot for not having this meaning in the latest Dictionary of American Slang, proceeded to knock himself out in researching and speculating about its origin:

"Skinny, as a noun, comes from an earlier adjectival use meaning of, like, or exposing a lot of skin This use was prevalent from the 16th to the early 20th century: In modern days we say something is skin-colored, hot in olden days the term was skinny-colored. In other words, skinny refers to skin itself, and our modern use of this word to mean 'thin' is quite recent.

"By 1835, to skin, which had previously been used only to refer to skinning animals, took on the slang meaning of 'to cheat or plagiarize, as oo a school test, the image being that one skinned the information from another's brains or paper, and soon thereafter skinny was used hy students as a noun to mean 'cheating, especially by plagiarizing or copying another's work.' For example, The Dictionary of Americanisms shows that there was an 1854 Yale University student soog which included the line I skinned and fizzled through' in order to graduate. This use of skin and skinmy has continued ever since the 1830s, and by the 1950s students were using skinny to mean the information or inside authoritative facts which one copied or plagia-

The slanguist is ready to pounce.
"It seems to be this student use that was picked up in a description of security leaks as hot, inside skinny.' Thus skinny, originally meaning the material or facts copied by a student cheating on an exam (which, I guess, is a type of leak), is applied to other information or facts that are obtained surreptitiously or unethically. "Although the original use of skinny in this cheating and taking of information goes back to the image of skinning an animal, this original image has been lost and I believe that those who use the term oow probably relate skinny to the bare facts' being exposed as naked. or perhaps even as playing it close to the bone."

The Sudden Rise of the Bard of Albany

By Curt Suplee

VERILL PARK, New York A- Virgil had Rome, and Homer sang the war-sick plains of Troy. Joyce did Dublin, Carl Sandburg limned Chicago and William Kennedy, well, he's got Alhany.

As in the Empire State, capital of. A burg once so mired in ignominy that it lacked even the jokebutt celebrity of a Cleveland or Peoria. And only a year ago, a similar oblivion faced its poet laureate, all of whose books are set there: He was broke and worried about how his latest novel, "Ironweed," would be received. And there was reason to worry: His three earlier novels, despite incandescent notices, had sold only a few thousand copies and were out of print.

But Nelson Rockefeller had resuscitated his capital with a sudden gust of greenbacks; and for Kennedy in the past year, "the reversals of my life have been extraordinary — almost every-thing has turned inside out."

"Ironweed" set off critical skyrockets: "Pray for more," said Time; "Among the best of our current American novelists," declared Newsweek Then the Mac-Arthur Foundation chose Kennedy for one of its $264,000, five-year grants. "It hit me," he says, rummaging for a simile, "like a ton of money." And Viking Press reissued two of his novels — "Billy Phelan's Greatest Game" (1978) and "Legs" (1976)—and will republish The Ink Truck" (1969) this year.

"Billy" and "Legs" were sold to the movies, and Kennedy was signed to write both scripts. And Francis Ford Coppola tapped him to rewrite the screenplay for "The Cotton Club," the $40-millioo Harlem epic.

At the end of the year, Viking published "O Albany," his richly anecdotal history of the town. To communal rejoicing: "One of my friends said, 'All we're waiting for oow is the statue in the park." Finally. The New York Times Book Review chose "Ironweed" as one of 1983's 13 best books, lauding Kennedy's "tough-minded and defiant humanism."

Novelist Kennedy: "It hit me like a ton of money."

" 'Ironweed' had been rejected over and over and over again. Everybody thought it was a downer and wouldn't sell." "Bamhi," it isn't: Francis Phelan, former haseball star, flees his wife and child after killing a scab during a strike and after years returns to Albany a soul-broken stumblebum. Lost in a boozy nimbus of voices and visions, accompanied hy his decaying consort. Helen, he hires on as a gravedigger. Yet from this Orcus of squalor he begins to hoist his spirit, to realize that "the guilt he felt was oot worth the dying . . . The trick was to live, to beat the hastards." "That's the kind of characters," Kennedy said, "I've beco writing about. The refusal to yield to what appears to be fate. If you don't die and you don't quit, then there's a chance."

The verdict at the publishing houses, Kennedy said, was al-ways the same: "Who the hell wants to read about bums? Well, that's the kind of close-minded attitude of an awful lot of editors in this country. That's why fiction is in such a bad way, because they're looking for the same kind of instant glitter that sold last year. They'll now be looking for different kinds of 'Ironweed,' I fictional biography of Jack (Legs) Diamond, the vicious gangster-hrewer who in 1931 was finally shot to death in his underwear at an Albany hotel. He evolved into a national obsession, a godseod for copy-short oewsmen, a mesmerizing topic in tavern or tearoom. Yet profoundly evil.

"So why do we like him?" Kennedy muses. "I kept saying to myself, Why am I writing about this son of a hitch?" Among the book's many answers is Diamond's odd integrity: "It is one thing to be corrupt. It is another to behave in a psychologically responsible way toward your own

"Billy Phelan's Greatest Game," is Kennedy's fastest paced and most densely textured work about a pool shark, bowling ace and saloon-wise hustler who prowls among Albany's night-town denizens.

Each oovel moves in liquid transition between reality and fantasy, and many oarrative voices elide like whispers in a dream. Each is set in the 1930s. But then, Kennedy said, "I've always thought I was born out of

The sequined choristas are as outrageously costumed as ever, the music is as brassy, and the daiquiris as sweet. But 25 years after Fidel Castro's enerrillas took command Cuba's top nightspot dances to a different tune.

"When I started here in '58, the admission charge alone was out of reach of the Cuban people," said Pedro Pineiro, who began as a 17year-old Tropicana busboy and now helps run the club.

By the time Castro's rebels rolled into the city in January 1959, the Tropicana had come to symbolize the decadence of 1950s Havana, where U.S.-based organized crime had built hotels and gamhling casinos, and was profiting - along with corrupt Cuban government officials — from prostitution, drugs and other rackets.

Why was this world-famous entertainment mecca, site of sexy shows twice nightly, spared under straitlaced socialism'

"The Tropicana is the musical image of Cuba," explained the cluh's administrative director, Ricardo Villanneva Russi.

But there is more to it: A "night at the Tropicana" is one of the biggest draws for tourist dollars in this poor island nation, and for Cuban workers it offers a glamorous respite from an often monoto-
